Don't buy a kibanja as if it is a mobile phone

JOSEPH KIMBOWA

OR: It is quite intriguing Ugandans prefer simplistic actions. It is uncommon for one to buy a mobile phone, sion set or a computer without g for its receipt. y even use the lack of a receipt y cheaply, calling it a product got deal'! Some take it a notch higher uy cars without requesting for its ok and drive it for years without the necessary transfers. simplistic, but careless lifestyle en crept into land transactions, ally in Buganda region where as multiple interests. le Ugandan land laws clearly te that a kibanja holder must form and seek consent of the vner before transferring their a interest to another, almost sactions on bibanja are done t involving the landowners. t usually happens is that people entify a buyer, go to the area airperson, draft and sign agreements; and that is it!

This is not only against the law, it is also unfair to the landowner who is entitled to annual nominal ground rent.

It is also risky to the purchaser as they stand to lose not just their money but the kibanja too. It is no wonder that sometimes landowners do the same by selling huge chunks of land occupied by bona fide occupants without their knowledge. We have created a man-eat-man society in the end!

Section 34 (1) of the Land Act clearly provides that a tenant by occupancy (kibanja holder) must first get the approval of the landowner before transacting on the said land. It notes thus: "A tenant by occupancy may, in accordance with the provisions of this section, assign, sublet or sub-divide the tenancy with the consent of the landowner."

Resultantly, we live in a chaotic society characterised by land wrangles, evictions, threats and even murders. Speculators and politicians have thus used this state of affairs to disenfranchise the poor and propose repressive land laws respectively.

But not all is doom. Buganda Land Board, for example, has shown us that we can all live in harmony, if we appreciated each other through a proper land management system.

For 30 years, Buganda Land Board has created an organised land management structure that has included massive registration and survey of tenants on Kabaka's land. This created the first-ever kibanja holders' database in Uganda, which is even being benchmarked by the Government and other countries.

This has significantly erased land wrangles on kingdom land because the landowner and tenants are in sync and understand their obligations.

All people registered with Buganda Land Board receive a certificate of occupancy, similar to the one dispensed by the Government to people on public land; this certificate shows plot boundaries, neighbours and acreage of one's kibanja.

They know that they have a minimum obligation of paying a nominal annual ground rent of no more than sh50,000; and they pay it without being forced.

They further know that whenever they want to change ownership of their land, there is a formal transfer process where their file name with the landowner is changed into the names of the new owner.
